A perfect white smile is now much easier!

There are many methods for tooth whitening both at home (bleaching strips, pen or gel) and in the dentist's office. But conventional, less advanced bleaching techniques are only effective in removing the stains caused by coffee, tea and tobacco, while they are unsuccessful in also eliminating stains caused by medications and fluoride. The main reason for this is that in conventional methods, the tooth enamel doesn't allow bleaching agents to have an effect on a deeper level, making conventional procedures only superficial.
